ON TRIAL.

While the reasons Comptroller Fitch gives for having favored the selection of Mr. Inman to fill the vacancy in the new Rapid-Transit Commission are entirely satisfactory, there was really no necessity for any explanation of his vote at all. Mr. Inman is a man of practical experience and well fitted for a member of such a body.

Mr. Inman is, however, on trial, and it will be necessary for him to be careful in his action. He was a member of the old Commission which was such a complete and lamentable failure, and he has been closely identified with the Gould inerests in many railroad projects.

After untold perils from hostile men and beasts and being twice nearly done for by the dread jungle fever, he regained the coast a few weeks ago. He has been lionized in Europe and has received many testimonials of esteem from scientific bodies both at home and abroad. His journey resulted in the contribution of much new and valuable data which he will make public through the New York Geographical Society.

He will doubtless make a publication of his adventures in book form for the public benefit, and a most interesting narrative it ought to be.

Mr. Chanler set forth from the west coast with a party consisting of 150 porters, 20 headmen and interpreters, 12 Soudaness soliders, 7 Somali camel drivers, 15 camels, 43 donkeys, 19 oxen, 50 sheep, 2 horses and 3 dogs. He proceeded at an average rate of about nine miles a day, until pestilence began to attack his animals. Little Miss Bonnie Thornton is very pretty. She has bright yellow hair, bright blue eyes, little white teeth and a face like a primrose. She wore a white lawn slip made exactly like a baby's, with the waist up under her arms and bands of insertion let into the skirt. She had a shirred lawn hat to match, and not a loop or a leaf of color marred the simplicity of her dainty outfit. Some folks thought she looked like a sweet girl graduate; others called her snowdrop, little white illy and Jasmine rose, and they were right, for she resembled them all.

She was suffering from slight hoarseness, but she captivated her audience the moment she appeared, and her efforts were well received. First she sang a topical song that made everybody laugh and clap for more, and then she took her white hat off, shook out her yellow curls and sang and talked about the poor babies. She called them "the darilingest little creatures in the world," and begged "for a mite to help the Fund."

Twenty-seven of his men died of the fever, and hiscompanion, Lieut, von Hohnel, was so badly hurt by a rhinoceros that he had to be sent back. At one point Mr. Chanler waited four months while natives went to the coast and returned with fresh beasts of burden. Even these could not live in the pstintial climate of the region. His native supporters, who had been patient and couragous in all the trying situations of the march, including a battle with an unfriendly tribe, grew demoralized at the fatalities among their comrades, and their animals, and began to desert in a body. Mr. Chanler finally reached the coast, accompanied only by his servant, George Galvin, a white man, who had cheerfully exchanged the comforts of attendance upon a city-dwelling bachelor to the hardships and dangers of an African campaign.

ance upon a city-dwelling bachelor to the hardships and dangers of an African campaign.

The Austrian war office furnished Mr. Chanler with his arms, and in consequence he has agreed to reward the Austrian Government with one-half of his reaps and notes. The other half goes to the Smithsonian Institute. The British East India Company will also benefit by the information he acquired, as he travelled under its rules with the promise of its protection.

The young explorer is a son of the late John Winthrop Chanler and a grandson of the late John Jacob Astor. He was graduated from Harvard seven years ago. He has a large fortune, and is a member of a number of New York clubs.

He looks brown and hardy, although he says that the fever left him with a troublesome liver, that he will try to mend at Carlsbad. He returns to Europein a few days. If he intude to make another try at the heart of Africa he has, as yet, no plans.
